DIGITALIS MAKES PROFITABLE CROP FOR FARMER

Experiments Made at Minnesota University Show Returns of Over $4,000 an Acre in Growing Foxglove.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 23.—A crop yielding $4,600.50 to the acre is possible for the Minnesota farmer in two or three years, according to Dr. Edwin L. Newcomb of the Pharmacy college of the state university. The results obtained by Dr. Newcomb during last summer on a small plot of ground on the campus are cited to bear out the assertion.

The garden, containing approximately 40,000 square feet, was divided into plots averaging 10x16 feet. Seven of these plots, or 1120 square feet, were sown in different varieties of the digitalis plant, commonly known as foxglove.

Acres Yields $4,600.50.

The crop of those seven plots, when dried, amounted to 160 pounds. Dried digitalis is quoted as $1.20 a pound, making the yield from that small amount of ground worth $120. At the same rate of yield to an acre, the return would amount to $4,600.50.

The profitable nature of the crop has been discovered in England and considerable tracts of land are being devoted to the raising of this plant for the drug market. And there is no reason, Dr. Newcomb says, why people in Minnesota should not make large profits in a few years, although they could not be secured at once, as different soils cause greater or less toxic strength in the drug.

Strength of Crop.
The drug derived from the cured plant, known as digitalis, would be stronger in some cases than in others and an ordinary dose of the drug from a plant of unusual strength might prove fatal.

After becoming acquainted with the manner of growth, Dr. Newcomb suggests as a means of escaping this difficulty that retail pharmacists in a community might supervise the growing and make assays of the cured product to determine the strength of the particular crop.

The plant is handled much like the tomato plant at first. It must be started early in the spring in cold frames and transplanted later in the spring. After it is started it is hardy, and two tons to the acre in ordinary rich soil are easily possible, according to Dr. Newcomb.

"THE TRAVELING SALESMAN."
James Forbes' four-act comedy, "The Traveling Salesman," comes to the Elks' opera house here this season. In this play the author has provided Don MacMillan, the traveling salesman, with a vehicle just suited to his style of acting. As Bob Blake, the jolly drummer, whose specialty is ladies' apparel, MacMillan is said to conform in every particular to the popular conception of a traveling salesman.

The play opens on Christmas day at Grand Crossing, a small town which exists only by virtue of the fact that two railroads intersect at that point. Blake is one of a number of salesmen who find himself "stranded" and far from home and friends on the glad yuletide. He strolls into the railway station and immediately becomes interested in the winsome young woman in charge of the telegraph office, Beth Elliott. It is a case of love at first sight. The girl owns a piece of worthless land left by her father. It is all she has, and it is about to be sold for taxes which she is unable to pay. Royce, a pretended admirer of the girl and a friend of Martin Drury, Blake's employer, learns that the railroad is going to buy the land and schemes to get possession of it. He gives the story away during a poker game, but Blake blocks the game by paying the taxes. Royce denounces him to the girl, who believes he has tried to defraud her, but later when the complications are unraveled and she becomes cognizant of the true state of affairs, she takes unto herself a husband, his signature being necessary for the transfer of the property in order to make the deed valid. She marries Blake and thereby finds her real enemies. The comedy of the play is of the most delicious character, and in it Mr. MacMillan has scored a great personal hit.

VALUABLE WORK IS PUBLISHED BY WHITTIER

Constitution of New Mexico With Exhaustive Annotations of Great Value to Lawyers and Laymen.

The constitution and ensuing act of New Mexico, copiously annotated with citations of court decisions from every court in the United States, besides many English authorities, is a work which has just come from the press and which will fill a great demand, not only from the lawyers of the state but from all persons who are interested in acquainting themselves with the fundamental law of the new state.

The work was compiled by Arthur O. Whittier, of Santa Fe, and in every respect is a creditable production. Every section of the constitution containing any provision which has ever been made the subject of judicial construction is accompanied by citations of all the authorities bearing on the subject, and the lawyer with this book in his possession will find that he is not traveling an uncharted route when he comes to study the constitution of the state.

The Flood amendment, which was adopted by the voters at the recent election, is set out in full, bringing the work thoroughly down to date. Facsimile reproductions of the signatures of all the members of the constitutional convention constitute the frontispiece of the book, and are not the least pleasing feature of the work to those who are interested in preserving the memory of New Mexico's memorable constitutional convention.

Mr. Whittier's book will undoubtedly command a large sale, as there is a large demand for such a work both on the part of lawyers and laymen all over the state, and the thoroughness and excellence of the labor performed in the compilation of the annotations contained in the book add greatly to its value.
